

John Bailey is a research staff member in the Cost Analysis and Research Division at the Institute for Defense Analysis, conducting research in software engineering, software measurement, software reuse, and quality improvement. Before joining IDA, John studied the cost effectiveness of software development techniques, languages, processes, and training in both industry and government settings.

John has master's and doctoral degrees in computer science from the University of Maryland.

BSI Articles

Name	Content Areas
A Common Sense Way to Make the Business Case for Software Assurance	knowledge/business
Models for Assessing the Cost and Value of Software Assurance	knowledge/business